Here's proof that the mini jug bearing the brand name, which endured through the 1950s, is from Cairo, Ga.'s Roddenbery plant. Other collectors thought it had come from Ala. [Photo courtesy of Jim & Pattey Daniel]

During the latter part of the 19th century and into the first quarter of the 20th, one way of advertising a business was to give away sample products bearing the firm's name.

Patrons took home trade cards, calendars, thermometers, miniature bottles and ceramic containers, most bearing the company name, address and city of origin. Even today's companies continue that tradition, mainly in the forms of calendars.

The small ceramic containers were manufactured mostly in the shapes of jugs, although other utilitarian ware such as tiny water pitchers are known. The mini jugs advertised saloons, groceries, hotels, drug stores, vinegar works and even the brands of liquid samples they sometimes carried.

After acquiring eight mini jugs from Augusta, Georgia over the last few years, this writer wondered just how many existed from his home state. He contacted several collectors who shared information from their own collections and so far has been able to document 225 different.

Mini jugs are generally about 3-1/4 inches in height or less. There are other, smallish jugs the writer likes to call “semi-minis” about 5-1/4 inches in height. Georgia examples include Augusta’s souvenir 1888 Exposition jug, another from Stevens Bros. Pottery in Baldwin County and another from Columbus. There may be more, but that’s another story.

Majority of mini jugs are sealed with a modified Albany slip from the top of the spout about halfway down the side, resulting in various shades of brown (tan, chocolate). The bottom half is sealed with a clear glaze placed over the black or blue ink-stenciled message. It’s probably a Bristol slip, which turns white when fired.

“Scratch” jugs are more labor intensive. Most are glazed with Albany slip, the brown clay sealant from that section of New York state. While the glaze is still wet, a sharp-pointed instrument such as a nail is used to inscribe the message after which the jug is placed inside the kiln and fired. The scratched portion stands out in yellowish-white against a dark brown background.

Mini jugs contained a variety of liquids, including cider, vinegar and, of course, whiskey, while some contained nothing at all. The spouts were plugged with tiny corks, while in the author’s Augusta collection is one plugged with clay. It was not intended to be filled with anything although it touts “Moss Rose” whiskey from the Rose Distillery in Atlanta.

Mini jugs likely were given away or sold as souvenirs to tourists or visitors. Mini jugs aren’t limited to the state’s major cities of Atlanta, Augusta, Columbus, Macon and Savannah, but hail from a variety of smaller communities, some of which cannot be located on today’s maps.

Pottery representatives must have had remarkable powers of persuasion to talk a grocer in Leaf, Georgia into buying mini jugs. Leaf, by the way, is still on the map. Not on the map are Harmony Grove, Nyson, Parkman, Robinson, Silver Shoal and Webbville, but mini jugs exist from those places.

Check out the state listing accompanying this article. The author would like to hear from collectors having different mini jugs from cities, towns and communities or from businesses other than those listed.

One of the more unusual mini jugs is a scratch jug inscribed Compliments of / R. Remler / Forest City Gun Club / Whiskey

Store / G.W. O’Connor. There is no city name, but there is only one Forest City Gun Club and it’s in Savannah.

The club was founded in 1883 and is the oldest and largest continuously operated skeet, trap and sporting clays club in America, according to its history carried at www.forestcitygunclub.com. It boasts 26 fields, a 40-acre lake, a grand clubhouse and other amenities on its 537 acres.

Yet another interesting example is a scratch jug inscribed Compliments of / Arlington Hotel Bar / Moss Rose / Augusta, Ga. The Arlington Hotel, grand late Victorian Age edifice complete with turrets, stood at the corner of 8th and Broad streets. When the original J.B. White department store down the block caught fire in 1899, the blaze spread to the hotel. As the conflagration raged, many men were seen running into the hotel bar and emerging with bottles of booze. Police soon called a halt, but the author likes to think that his mini jug, also called a “nip,” was among the pilfered items.

Who manufactured these mini jugs?

“I think about 90 percent of them were made by the Bauer Potteries in Paducah and Louisville, Kentucky,” said Jerry McKinley of Shelbyville, Ky., an expert on pottery from his state. “I know that the Congress Hall Saloon / Bainbridge, Ga., mini jug was made by John Bauer in Louisville. His brother, Andy, operated the Paducah Pottery.”

Dr. William C. Ketchum Jr., in his book, “American Pottery & Porcelain,” says stoneware miniature jugs were made at potteries from “New England west to Missouri and south to Kentucky” between 1860 and 1910.

Chuck Neese, a self-described “jug bug” from Pegram, Tenn., has done research to confirm what McKinley said. Neese, author of “The Whiskey Jug Book,” learned that J. Andy Bauer bought the Frank Parham Pottery in Paducah in 1886. Since 1875, Bauer had worked with his brother John at the latter’s pottery in Louisville “where they made jugs, milk pans, fruit jars and specialized in sample jugs (minis) for the whiskey and vinegar trade.”

Neese said J. Andy Bauer employed 75 workers in the Paducah Pottery and kept several salesmen on the road selling his brown-glazed jugs, white mixing bowls and milk jugs. Because of an asthmatic condition, J. Andy Bauer moved his pottery company to Los Angeles, Calif., in 1909, later becoming famous for his line of brightly colored dinnerware.

Confirmation of McKinley’s and Neese’s research came to light in a wonderful book titled “Bauer — Classic American Pottery” by Mitch Tuchman (Chronicle Books, 275 Fifth Street, San Francisco, 1995). Among the illustrations in the book’s first chapter on the J.A. Bauer Pottery Company history are photos of stenciled miniature presentation jugs from both Paducah and Louisville potteries. Profiles of 10 private Bauer collections come later in the book and the first of these from collector Ben S. Wood III has a color photo of many stenciled and scratch storage jars, large jugs and, of course, mini jugs.

Few mini jugs were signed by either pottery, although longtime collector Bill Wrenn of Watkinsville, Ga., has a Louisville “Carnival” example stamped John Bauer / Pottery / Louisville, Ky., on the base. It features the head of a buck deer and Oct. 8, 1899 (the “8” inside the spread of the buck’s antlers) and its design outline is similar to the Bainbridge saloon mini jug.

Potteries still abounded in the South during what the writer believes was the main merchant mini jug era from the 1890s to the first quarter of the 20th century, notwithstanding incursions into the trade by glass “fruit jars” and local and regional efforts to establish prohibition. Introduction of fruit jars forced many potteries to abandon utilitarian forms and produce roofing tiles, paving bricks or water and sewer pipes or go out of business.

There were still-thriving potteries in Georgia’s Crawford and Washington counties, as well as others in the northeastern section of the state, but no mini jug documentation exists, as far as the author knows.

The writer believes some of his Augusta minis may have been made by the Hahn Pottery Works in North Augusta, South Carolina across the Savannah River from Augusta. He found a mini jug fragment in a waster dump at the Hahn site.

Dr. John Burrison of Atlanta, author of the folk pottery history of Georgia called “Brothers in Clay,” never found even traces of mini jugs being manufactured by any Georgia pottery, he said. He was able to explore waster dumps at many of those potteries.

This author thanks the following who shared their knowledge and collections to make this story possible: Butch and Debbie Alley of Douglasville, Ga.; Bob Simmons, Atlanta; Bill Wrenn, Watkinsville, Ga.; Dave Swetmon, Atlanta; Tommy Mitchiner, Gordon, Ga.; Paul Blatner, Savannah; Orville Seals, North Jackson, Ohio; Frank Langston, Marietta, Ga.; Tom Hicks, Eatonton, Ga.; Philip Haley, Carnesville, Ga.; Russ Butler, Havana, Fla.; Walter and Bruce Smith, Augusta, Ga.; Chuck Neese, Pegram, Tenn.; Vonnie Shelton, Special Collections, McCracken County Public Library, Paducah, Ky.; Dr. John Burrison, Atlanta; Jerry McKinley, Shelbyville, Ky.; Jim and Pattey Daniel, Sylvester, Ga.; Tony Riley, Belvedere, S.C.; Jack Hewitt, Lawrenceville, Ga.; Dennis Hendrix, Aiken, S.C., and Tim Ridge, Crossville, Tenn.
