THE DIGGER AND HIS WIFE!

Yes digger, you have a wife. How do you plan on being gone in day long chunks? Well, by making up for it in other ways probably. Fortunately, you can include your wife in the thrills of privy digging, even if she stays home, which she should.

There are items, nay, TREASURES, within the pit that are there just to give the privy digging husband a slight edge when trying to get out the door. When coming home from a dig, crusted with filth and caked with grime, it is nice to be able to say, "Oh look Honey Bunny, look what I got for YOU" !

Then you will whip out the following items, if possible:

- Buttons (there are many glass buttons in an average dig, snag them all).
- Marbles.
- Tea set and play dolls dishes.

- Doll heads, and arms and legs.
- Parasol handles.
- Toothbrush handles.
- Etc, etc, etc...

Try to get them interested in a certain type of bottle, hopefully of the type that you will actually find on a semi-regular basis; "Look Babe, I got you another";

- Cologne or perfume.
- Shoe polish.
- Stove Blacking.
- Local Pharmacy or Drug Store.
- Sewing machine oil.
- Etc, etc, etc...

If you can occasionally sell a bottle or two and take her out on the town, reminding her a few times that it was the privy digging that paid for it, that is also a fine way to be a big super digger husband.

Except Courtesy of Eddie Brater III from his publication: The Essentials of Privy Digging .

If you have not already had a chance to view Eddie's web page on Privy Digging or his online publication you can do so on his informative and humorous website: www.privydigger.com where both his ebook and other interesting digging related articles and items can be found!

U.S. MARINE AND PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICES BOTTLES - MYTHOLOGY DISPELLED

For some time I had wondered about these interesting bottles and their origin as there seemed to be a lot of misinformation on Ebay about what they actually were used for?

The Marine-Hospital Service was an organization of Marine Hospitals dedicated to the care of ill and disabled seamen in the U.S. Merchant Marine, U.S. Coast Guard and other federal beneficiaries. Aside from the well-being of these sailors, the hospitals provided a key monitoring and gate-keeping function against pathogenic diseases.

The Service was created by an act of the 5th United States Congress, which was signed into law on 16 July 1798 by President John Adams. The Act required the Department of the Treasury to "provide for the relief and maintenance of disabled seamen." This Act led to the formation of several loosely-controlled hospitals at sea and river ports all across the United States, which was officially the Marine-Hospital Fund. The Act specified the revenue for the Hospital Fund to come from the merchant seamen. Merchant seamen that used the early hospital fund hospitals were charged "20 cents per month." This series of hospitals to care for merchant seamen was based on the British practice of establishing hospitals to care for sailors and merchant seamen. The Marine Hospital Fund was a unique and early mechanism to provide the first publicly-funded health care and disease prevention federal agency in the United States.

. In 1871, the Marine Hospital Fund was formally reorganized as the Marine Hospital Service, under the direction of Dr. John Maynard Woodworth. This eventually led to the creation of the modern-day Public Health Service Commissioned Corps. Dr. Woodworth, using Army-style heraldry, created the Marine Hospital Service fouled anchor and caduceus seal which is used to this day by the Public Health Service. In 1873, Dr. Woodworth's title was changed to "Supervising Surgeon General," a forerunner of the modern-day office of Surgeon General of the United States.

It was the point of origin for the Public Health Service and the Public Health Service Commissioned Corps of the present-day Department of Health and Human Services, and current Operating Divisions (OPDIV) and Staffing Divisions that include the National Institutes of Health, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, Indian Health Service, and a host of other federal-level health programs.

Our local history of this organization includes the founding of a Marine Hospital at Port Townsend in 1855 to provide medical services for merchant seamen, the relocation of this facility to Port Angeles between 1862-1866, when it again was relocated back to Port Townsend.

In 1878 Congress passed the National

Quarantine Act, which prevented vessels from carrying infectious diseases into any United States Port, and as a result an offshoot facility In November 1893, the Federal Marine Quarantine Station for Puget Sound opens at Diamond Point, located at the northeastern tip of Clallam County across Discovery Bay from Port Townsend. The Quarantine Station provides disinfection services for vessels wishing to enter Puget Sound, and an isolation hospital for passengers found to be suffering from or suspected of carrying infectious disease .

Yes, we encounter this most favorite and or public enemy number one almost every excursion into our hidden places to dig , but did you know this nemesis has been around for a much shorter duration than many of the bottles and treasures we seek buried underneath?

Introduced to the United States in 1885 by Luther Burbank from India to the United States, this berry has origins as mysterious as some of the bottles that come out of the ground, but has been traced back to Armenia and has made a number of immigrations with folks from Armenia, to Germany, and then throughout the English empire, finally making an appearance in the Northwest United States.

Originally brought to the United States as a way to create a better Blackberry plant than our anemic native varieties, this plant over the next 100 plus years has now become one of the most invasive and noxious of weeds despite its great tasting berries.

What can you do? Suck it up and bring extra band aids or take advantage of the possible added income and diversion created from those holes in the ground the party can do when not digging!!

While many of us are aware of the local history of our area and the great impact the Japanese Americans had on our local society and economy in the Puget Sound area, I am constantly reminded of those in nearly every shovel of relic that comes out of the ground.

The evidence of a thriving and vibrant culture from the pre WWII internment camp days can be found in a number of privies, pits, and dumps throughout our regions, especially given the richness of the soil in the pre dam days.

Whether in the form of medicine bottles, broken pottery/dishes, or other relics it is a reminder of the rich history that lives under our feet. -Scott Gibbons

Dear Collecting Enthusiast,

On Saturday, November 12th, the Washington Bottle Collectors Association invites you to be a part of our Fall Collectibles Show in Chehalis, Washington.

The Southwest Washington Fairgrounds are located a short distance from Interstate 5, exit 179, and boasts ample day and over-night parking. Motels are abundant in the area. Antique shops abound a couple of miles up the road in downtown Centralia.

The show will be held in the Community Events building. It's clean and well lit with white walls that enhance the lighting and visibility of sale items.

Warren Lhotka and Pete Hendricks will co-chair the show this year.

Dealer drop off begins Friday, November 11th, at noon. Early lookers may enter the building at 1:00pm. Set up ends at 7pm. For those unable to set up Friday, set up will resume at 8:00am Saturday morning, November 12th. Saturday show hours are 9:00am - 3:00pm. Overnight parking with or without hookup is available.

Please be prepared to stay until the close of the show at 3:00pm on Saturday.

We look forward to seeing you there!
